This is a happy story about a delightful, likeable young girl that other children could easily relate to. She is family oriented and loves a tradition she and her mother have developed together. When she finds she cannot share that tradition one year because her mother is needed elsewhere, her immediate community, especially her modern and loving Dad step in. They combine to give her back her beautiful tradition in a creative but new way. She is quick to learn the value of community and the excitement of sharing with others as well as welcoming a new addition into her warm and caring family. What child would not enjoy reading about Katy's joyous world of kindness and multicultural friendships?

Allison dogger is my daughter. I thought the book was marvelous, When she was a child we went apple picking every year. Trading Apple days was a trip down memory lane.

My daughter loves this book. She kept on asking me to read it to her over and over again. She's 5 years old. Perfect for this age.

This was a good story for Rosh Hashanah. It wasn't simply listing traditions as some other holiday books do. Cute!

Perfect for my pre k class

loved it

Cute story that had very little to do with Rosh Hashanah.

Sweet story but too wordy for three year olds.
