GPS systems are great.... but it is even more helpful to SEE where you are on the map plus, GPS systems are not infallible and can cause a lot of frustration. I study the map first and then use the GPS, but I keep the map in the car to refer to at stops.

Half of the state is on the front. The other half of the state is on the other side and requires flipping the map back and forth, as well as rotating it. It's completely useless for planning.

Hard to find actual maps in this day of GPS; my GPS got confused in the rural mountains of West Val was glad to have the paper version

Great for two old ladies on a vacation.

Yes, it's a map and I can read it.

I have friends that just moved to West VA, and I wanted to have an "over view" of the state. This map was detailed and helpful.

Perfect.

They are good quality maps. Most recent I could find. Dated 2010. Sold on at a lesser price than at land bookstores, so do the math. And I don't belong to that big auto insurance company that gives you maps and routing, so this was the next best thing. Use Google for routing and get the state map here to make sure you are where you should be OR that your navigator is taking you correctly. (Ours made a few mistakes--we were heading south and it adamantly wanted to take us north).
